Sade Kharbanda specialises in dispute resolution and litigation with an emphasis on the media and entertainment sector. Sade deals with disputes involving infringement of intellectual property in addition to a broad range of general commercial and contractual disputes.

She also regularly advises scriptwriters, songwriters, directors and production companies in the television and film sector on various matters throughout the development, production and distribution stages, including specifically the acquisition of underlying rights and all production matters.

Sade also provides advice to clients in the creative sector focusing on commercial, digital media and intellectual property issues, and has a broad experience in advising online clients in respect of data protection and privacy issues.

Having obtained a distinction in the legal practice course, Sade trained at New Media Law LLP and qualified in August 2009.

Example of advice:

- general commercial dispute resolution and litigation advice in the High Court, County Court and Employment Tribunal;
- advising individuals and businesses in respect of television and film distribution licensing, option and license agreements, co-venture shareholder agreements, distribution agreements, director, scriptwriter and crew service agreements;
- advising digital media businesses on user terms and conditions, privacy policies, content licensing agreements and web development and hosting service agreements;
- advising on company law including shareholder agreements, shareholders disputes, company incorporation and corporate structuring and director's service agreements; and
- advising artists on management and recording agreements.
