SUMMARY

Paul qualified as solicitor in England in 1986, as a solicitor in Hong Kong in 1995 and as a solicitor advocate in the English civil courts in 2001.

He is a litigation lawyer but one who appreciates that the exercise of legal rights is not an end in itself but must serve wider commercial objectives. To that end he seeks to address issues from the combined standpoint of law, business and public relations. Knowledge of the law is not enough; knowledge of the industry in which the client operates is essential. Further whether defending or asserting rights Paul appreciates that obtaining legal advice represents an expense and that the exercise must be cost effective .

Paul has a strong defendant client base, acting for newspapers, magazine publishers and campaign groups. He acts to protect the media's right to investigate and to criticise, and to protect the freedom of speech generally.

Paul also offers reputation management as a core service. He attracts many clients from the worlds of entertainment (actors, celebrities and musicians), politics and business.
